Greg Inglis has backed Anthony Mundine's stance on the national anthem and believes some of the lyrics should be changed.

The South Sydney star won't sit out the anthem during NRL matches, but understands why the controversial boxer has taken his stance ahead of his fight with Danny Green.

"When you actually sit there and read the anthem and do your study behind it you can understand why," Inglis said of Mundine's vow. "I am a proud indigenous man and I know for a fact (Mundine) will make a stance and he's a very strong person and what he believes in he'll stick to. I do believe some of the wording can be changed but in saying that I think it's something we need to look into very carefully and have a really good think and read about the history of it."
